

Dear [insert name],

I am writing to ask you to urge the government to take action to improve cancer patient experience for children and young people.

As you may be aware, the All Party Parliamentary Group on Children, Teenagers & Young Adults with Cancer (APPG CTYAC) has launched a new report, entitled 'Listen up! What matters to young cancer patients', looking into patient experience for children and young people across the UK.

The report concludes the APPG's first ever Inquiry into patient experience for children and young people with cancer and makes a number of recommendations for change, including:

- Compulsory lessons in secondary school on spotting the signs of cancer
- Designated hospital parking for children and young people with cancer
- An agreement from the Government to meet with young cancer patients yearly to discuss their experiences
- Offering access to free fertility treatment to survivors of childhood cancer who were not offered fertility preservation before receiving cancer treatment

The APPG CTYAC is now urging Governments across the UK to take action to improve cancer patient experience for children and young people with cancer.

This report is important [to me?] because...

(This is your opportunity to share your story and highlight any particular recommendations you feel would make a difference)

I would be grateful if you could write to Steve Brine MP, Parliamentary Under Secretary of State for Public Health and Primary Care and the Minister with responsibility for Cancer and urge him to take action on the report's recommendations.

I would really appreciate your support in working to improve patient experience for children and young people with cancer.

You can find out more and read the report in full here:

Best wishes,

(Make sure to include your name, full address and postcode, otherwise your MP won't be able to respond to you.)
